We know that CHANGE is INEVITABLE. Make sure that you change for the goodness of the majority, not on your own self. If you want to see a difference, start it with yourself.

Freelancing isn't a steady gig

Truth: Depending on your line of work, freelancing can actually be a very steady gig in an unsteady environment. In order to meet a monthly or yearly quota, most freelancers take on multiple projects at once, and while it's true that projects do come and go, it's highly unlikely that all of your clients will stop using your services all at once.

FACTS

They freelance to supplement their income. This might mean that they have other full- or part-time jobs that pay a portion of their bills, or they might freelance to provide an extra income source for their families.

Importance of Branding Brands Signify Your Intent

Everything that your organization exemplifies should be easily recognizable throughout the brand. Else, your customers will be quick to notice the gap between what was promised and what was actually delivered on the ground.

Mistakes of a Freelancer to Avoid

Know When to Shut Up

Part of knowing when to keep quiet is deciphering the difference between promising a client that you can deliver the moon on a silver platter and actually knowing that you'll be able to deliver that moon on a silver platter. Some freelancers get scared that if they tell a client they can't do something, that client will huff and puff and rip their arm off before taking their business elsewhere.
